

We will not forget.

November 15 marks the day three years ago when New Zealanders were unjustly mandated with “No Jab, No Job”.

While deaths from Covid have slowed to a trickle, the numbers of people with vaccine injuries have soared, and many have died from their injuries. Reports from overseas show that more people have died from vaccine injuries than from Covid-19.

Many people are still too sick to work and unable to pay for therapies. None of this has been acknowledged as yet by the government. And many New Zealanders continue to grieve for lost relationships as the government’s inhumane Covid response have divided us, damaging the very fabric of our society.

Please remember them in a moment of silence: Saturday, 16 November 12 noon.
